FREELY ADMITTED.

The Failure of the Crimes Act in Ireland.

SPECIAL CABLEGRAM TO THE POST-DISPATCH.

LONDON, October 15.—The reverses which have been steadily suffered by the Sallysbury Government in trying to carry out the provisions of the Crimes Act in Ireland are easily admitted within Ministerial circles and by the Unionists throughout the country to be very serious indeed. They see that tremendous mistakes have been made from the first, and although they do not confess the incompetency of the Cabinet and the villainy and dishonesty of the constabulary, whom are patently to every one, they nevertheless are compelled to acknowledge that the business of coercion now carried on is all wrong. The remedy which they suggest is an utterly false one, but that is to be expected. A wiser and more energetic administration or a new election act is predicted as soon as Mr. Balfour shall have obtained better control of the Dublin Executive. The number of officials who are charged with being either sympathizers of the League, or directly guilty of treason to the Government, are a ludicrous comment on the efficiency of the minor officers and the clear-sightedness of the Administration. Mr. Balfour's latest measure does not justify the hopes of the Conservatives that he will make advisable changes in the conduct of the case of the Government against the people of Ireland. He has again exposed the Government.

THE ALMOST INEVITABLE FAILURE,

Instituting a legal prosecution against two Wexford newspapers for publishing articles advocating the objects of the League. These articles do not differ in the tone of their language from a host of other articles of similar character which have been published from time to time and which have not invited the incompetent Minister to a legal prosecution.

The law advisers of the crown have selected the Wexford papers especially as the object of attack at this time, on the ground that the Crown will be able to produce at once elements of proof against them which will be sufficient to satisfy the technical requirements of the coercion act, making even the shadow of a case against many of the publications which the Cabinet would like to revenge themselves on. They have apparently become tired of striking out wildly and only making an absurd exhibition of themselves instead of enforcing their oriental laws. One high legal opinion, beside that specially kind enough to advise the Ministry, points to the certainty of the prosecution breaking down in this instance in the ridiculous prosecution of Mr. O'Brien and Lord Mayoral, and the Mitchells.

feeling among those best able to judge that it suppresses the common liberty of the press will result only in covering the Government with consuming ridicule, and making it more than ever the laughing stock of the world. Mr. Balfour will return to Dublin next week. If he is able to get the sanction of the Ministry for the fullest scope in the pursuance of his regime of wholesale repression of freedom of speech and conscience, he will throughout the country. He will start to do this very thoroughly and will close the doors of Dublin and everywhere where there is branch of the organization.

The Lord Mayor, Mr. Sullivan, offers rooms at the Mansion House for the headquarters of the League if it is suppressed in this wholesale fashion, and there will be plenty of friends all over to help out the organization. There is not a single item in the future programme of the Government and Balfour, which promises success, to say nothing of reclaiming the lost reputation of the Ministry, which even wise administration hereafter will fail to deodorize.

THE WAR-OFFICE SCANDAL.

Gen. Boulanger's Attitude Severely Criticized—The Probable Outcome.

SPECIAL CABLEGRAM TO THE POST-DISPATCH. PARIS, October 15.—It would be well if the Caffarelli business could be confined to the scandal attending to the sale of decorations, and to the persons immediately connected with the unfortunate affair. Not that the entanglement of persons not directly implicated in the matter is likely to threaten the peace of the country, for what is likely to be impossible, but the numerous shades and wide ramifications of the issues growing out of the conspiracy have already involved persons who find themselves at last in the position they have long sought to occupy—that of being in public controversy with the Government—and without great care on the part of the Minister of war to guard against such results, These malcontents will no doubt succeed in plunging France into a state of confusion in which the primary cause of the trouble will be lost sight of in the new issues presenting themselves. Chief among these persons is Gen. Boulanger. From the moment of his leaving the War Office to the present time, he has posed as a martyr to his patriotism and exceptional abilities, and has tried to neglect any chance of making one, to give the public to understand that he is suffering humiliation and partial disgrace for his devotion to the people of France. Every act of the Government affecting the army in the remotest degree has been turned by him into an insult to himself, and there are thousand opportunities of doing so.

LOST NO OPPORTUNITY

ITALY'S ACTIVE OPERATIONS.

BERLIN, October 15.—The War Ministry seems to be preparing for something more than defensive operations at Massowah. An army is to be sent out, and the whole affair looks like an expedition into the interior. A force of 6,000 men will embark shortly for Massowah, and a stronger body will follow next month. Three hundred officers go out to relieve those who have been long in the African service.

Inspecting a Road.

By Telegraph to the POST-DISPATCH.

QUINCY, Ill., October 15.—J. F. Barnard, President of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad, accompanied by A. G. King and J. H. Smith of Cincinnati, J. W. Donaldson, W. L. Webb of New York, directors, arrived here this morning. After being shown around the city by prominent business men, about noon they went to special train, accompanied by O. H. Bull, resident trustee, and other officers of the Quincy, Illinois & St. Louis, to the latter road. The President came here direct from the direction of the Mississippi. While nothing positive can be said, it is believed here that the visit is with a view of making a Western connection with the Q. M. & P. and its rival absorption.

Resigned.

OMAHA, Neb., October 15.—T. W. Miner, chief clerk in the Union Pacific Railroad passenger department in this city, has resigned and gone to Kansas City.

Col. Mapleson's Latest Troubles—An Obscure Company Special Cablegram to the Post-DISPATCH.

LONDON, October 15.—Little Joseph Hoffman, soon to start for America, is very successful with his piano recitals at St. James Hall.

Col. Mapleson is depressed in spite of the fact that, as he informs me, he is making money hand over fist. Some wicked pressman sent out a telegram to the effect that his company had collapsed in Belfast. The telegram caught the sight of the Colonel's supplementary company at Mont Cenis on their way to England. They immediately turned around and went back to the land where the iron bloom, and neither love nor money can persuade them to pass the Alps again. They have been stranded before.

SCARED BY THE MEASLES.

The Czar's Hurried Departure From the Palace of Tredenburg.

SPECIAL CABLEGRAM TO THE POST-DISPATCH.

LONDON, October 15.—The Czar has left the pleasant palace of Tredenburg, near Copenhagen, most suddenly, owing to an outbreak of the most malignant measles. Four children of the Crown Prince of Denmark are very ill.

ENGLAND.

GLADSTONE AND CHAMBERLAIN.

LONDON, October 15.—Mr. Gladstone is preparing an elaborate reply to Mr. Chamberlain, whose tour, intended solely to arouse the Orangemen, has been a success, so far as achieving its object is concerned. Mr. Gladstone will make further speeches at Nottingham and severals on the way.

THE PREPARATORY COMMISSION.

Mr. Gladstone and Mr. John Morley are contributors to a handbook on home rule which will be issued on Monday as a preparatory guide to the caucus of the Liberal Federation at Nottingham. The preface to the work will be supplied by Earl Spencer.

IRELAND.

APPOINTED LAND COMMISSIONER.

DUBLIN, October 15.—Mr. Valentine Blinds, bailiff on Lord Lansdowne's estate, has been appointed Land Commissioner under the new land act.

A SECRET INQUIRY ORDERED.

LONDON, October 15.—Balfour has ordered a secret inquiry concerning the relatives and friends of the leading Irish officials. It is notorious that the Government is permeated by Nationalists who have gained their positions since open competition has replaced the patronage system. Many officials, foreseeing the triumph of home rule, are making their peace with the new and carefully weighed attempt to suppress the common liberty of the press will result only in covering the Government with consuming ridicule, and making it more than ever the laughing stock of the world. Mr. Balfour will return to Dublin next week. If he is able to get the sanction of the Ministry for the fullest scope in the pursuance of his regime of wholesale repression of freedom of speech and conscience, he will be able to pursue the work he has started.

THE CROWN PRINCE IMPROVING.

BERLIN, October 15.—Since the German Crown Prince arrived at Bayreuth the infirmity of the throat has been reduced and his general health has improved. The air agrees with him, and he is now able to leave the building and capture the entire gang.

The police proceed to the place, took every person in the room, and found only one inmate.

SHAKESPEARE AGAIN.

IGNATIUS DONNELLY'S REMARKABLE CHAPTER ON PARALLELISMS.

Another Phase of the Argument That Lord Bacon Wrote the So-Called Shakespeare Plays—Extraordinary Similarities of Expression—Were These Unique, Striking and Identical Phrases Coined in the Same Mental Mind?

Special Telegraphic Correspondence.
New York, October 15.—THE WORLD will tomorrow print the following new contribution to the debate over the authorship of Shakespeare's plays:
In Mr. Ignatius Donnelly's forthcoming volume some eight chapters are devoted to the remarkable parallelisms of thought and expression in the acknowledged works of Bacon, and in the plays heretofore attributed to Shakespeare. The chapters are entitled "Identical Expressions," "Identical Metaphors," "Identical Quotations," "Identical Studies," "Identical Errors," "Identical Use of Unusual Words," "As to Identities of Characters" and "Identities of Style." This portion of Mr. Donnelly's work convinces well-informed research and criticism that in the preceding articles in the World this phase of the subject has been only slightly touched upon, but it is very important as tending to show that the same brain conceived and the same pen wrote both "Bacon" and "Shakespeare." Herewith are given liberal extracts from Mr. Donnelly's chapter on "Identical Expressions." The references which Mr. Donnelly attaches to each quotation are omitted on account of lack of space.

Who does not remember that curious word used by Hamlet to describe the coldness of the air upon the platform where he awaits the ghost:

"It is very cold,

It is a nipping and an eager air."

We turn to Bacon and we find this very word used in this same sense: "Whereby the cold becomes more eager."

We have in Bacon this expression: "The cause of dimness of sight is the expense of spirit." We turn to Shakespeare's sonnets and find precisely the same arrangement of words: "The expense of spirit in a waste of shame."

Bacon says: "Some noises help sleep, as * * * soft singing. The cause is for the most part to sollicit a genial attention." In Shakespeare we have:

"I am never merry when I hear sweet music,

The reason is your spirits are attentive."

Here we have the same words applied in the same sense to the same thing, the effect of music; and in each case the philosophy stops to give way to reason:

"The reason is,"

Bacon says: "Infinite variations." Shakespeare says:

"Nor custom stale our infinite variety."

Bacon says: "Man in his mansion sleep, exercise, passions, hath infinite variations. The faculties of the soul." Shakespeare says: "How infinite in faculties."

Bacon says: "To fall from a discord, or from a secret, into a concert of sweet accord." Shakespeare says:

"Nor is it moved with concord of sweet sounds."

We have three words used in the same sense by both writers.

We find in Shakespeare this well-known, but beyond our control: "There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will."

Their ends are of our own."

Bacon says: "Instruct yourself in all things between heaven and earth which may tend to virtue, wisdom and honor." Shakespeare has:

"Crawling between heaven and earth,

Bacchus: "There are more things in heaven and earth,

Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

Bacon refers to: "The power of imagination which is the mother of all the diseases of the mind." Shakespeare says:

"Carest thou not ministered to a mind dis-eased."

Here the parallelism is complete. In each case it refers to remedies for mental disease, and in the "diseases of the mind" of one man, his counterpart in the "mind disease" of the other, a change made necessary by the rhyme but not of accident or coincidence.

Bacon says: "Men have their time and die many times, death of things which they principally take to heart." Shakespeare says:

"The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny."

Bacon says: "The state of man." Shakespeare says: "The state of man."

Bacon speaks of "The vapors of Ambition." Shakespeare speaks of "The vapors of our valor."

Bacon says: "A spice of madnesse."

Shakespeare says: "This spice of your hypocrisie."

Bacon speaks of "Our sea-walls and good shipping."

Shakespeare describes England as "Our sea-wall, our bulwarks, and good shipping."

Bacon says: "His people were hot upon the business." Shakespeare says: "He is a busi-ness man."

Bacon says, speaking of old age: "He promised himself money, honor, friends and power."

Shakespeare says: "And thus he did, to thyself be true."

And it must follow, as the night day. That can't be so, for it is not any day."

Shakespeare we have this singular expression: "Oh, Heaven, it adds to my calamity."

Officer, though he had written that the "it" was a typographical error; but Knaught, in discussing the question, refers to the lines in the play:

"Sure, he that made us with such large dis-course,

Lies, before and after, gave us not that capability and godlike reason."

To rust us unuseful.

But when we turn to Bacon we find this expression which has puzzled the commentators, repeated; for instance: "Marten Luther, but in discourse of reason, finding that the world was in great disorder, and that the Queen Elizabeth past discourse of reason." And again: "True fortitude is not given to men of similitudes."

Shakespeare says: "A conqueror that will be fit for sound knavery."

A. J. Dunfield of Delaware Mine, Mich., calls my attention to the following parallelism:

"What a piece of work is a man!"

The paragon of animals, the beauty of the world,

While hee-soul of the living are the beauty of the world."

In Bacon's letter to King James, he says: "The shadow of death to your Majesty's most excellent person."

Shakespeare makes Macbeth say of human life: "It is a tale told by an idiot."

Told by an idiot, full of sound knavy, Signifying nothing."

The paragon of animals, the beauty of the world,

While hee-soul of the living are the beauty of the world."

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1887.

AGAIN the SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH challenges competition.

MORE news and better news in the SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH to-day than in any newspaper in the city or out of it.

CHICAGO is making a still hunt for the next National Democratic Convention, but St. Louis will capture it all the same.

PROMOTIONISTS and Anti-Prohibitionists will both read with interest our report on the present status of prohibition in Missouri.

THERE are something more than 56,000 voters enrolled in the fourteen new school districts. If all of these voters would do their duty when the school election comes around our public schools would be much better managed.

We have the greatest admiration for the learned city of Boston, but it is too far East to think of securing the next National Democratic Convention. This is a great country, and a point on its circumference is correspondingly distant from its center.

It is gratifying to learn from our New York correspondence that hazing is on the wane in the Eastern colleges. It is probably one of the results of the attention paid to athletics that the students in these great seminaries of learning are gradually approaching the better standard of conduct which prevails in all base ball clubs.

BAD omens and misfortune attended the President during his first two days in the cotton States for the first time on his tour. A trotsle set on fire by some miscreant was discovered just in time to prevent the wrecking of the President's train in Arkansas, and the orator who welcomed him to Memphis was prostrated while the President replied, and died in five minutes.

DENNIS KEARNEY has followed HENRY GEORGE from the Pacific Coast and has undertaken to turn his followers away from him by means of an anti-Chinese agitation. The Chinese question is not so exciting a theme in New York as it is in the sand-lot neighborhood, but DENNIS has been in the employ of the Pacific Coast monopolists for some years past, and is probably willing to go wherever they choose to send him.

THE diplomatic appointments of the Administration continue to attract unpleasant attention, and Mr. BAYARD must be kept quite busy watching the strange antics of his widely scattered appointees. Our truthful columns tell to-day for the first time of the remarkable performances of our Minister to Stockholm, as revealed by an investigation, which should have been made by the Department of State, but which was, as usual, left to the enterprise of the press.

It seems that Senator EVARTS was guilty of plagiarism when he undertook to silence the clamor against the surplus by showing that the collection of an excess of $100,000,000 a year costs each person in the United States only 3 cents a week. The "such-a-little-one" defense is a very ancient chestnut, and EVARTS borrowed it from BEN BUTLER, who defended the "salary grab" by showing that it amounted to nothing when divided among all the people.

THE publication by the New York WORLD of Prof. DAVIDSON's report on IGNATIUS DONNELLY's forthcoming work on SHAKESPEARE's plays was undoubtedly the literary sensation of the year. Such a subject, however, is far from being exhausted in a single article, and in this issue of the SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH we present some startling parallels between the language of BACON and the language of SHAKESPEARE, which must be read by every one who proposes to take an intelligent interest in the great discussion.

OUR Washington special gives the substance of some sensational disclosures of land-grabbing frauds appearing in Commissioner SPARKS' annual report. Such disclosures are old stories and the fact that he has found frauds in every land district and implicates hundreds and thousands of persons, some of them millionaires, in these schemes, will only make people ask: "Well, what will the Administration do about it?" Where there is so much land stealing why is there not some vigorous prosecution of the rascals, some effort to stop their operations?

GARRETT is said to be about to explode a bombshell in the shape of a charge that the purchase of the B. & O. Telegraph by the Western Union was effected while he was on the ocean by the suppression of cablegrams which he had sent while the sale was pending. The public will not be surprised if any such charge against Mr. GOULD shall be substantiated. It is generally believed that Mr. GOULD's control of the wires is used for all it can be made worth to him. His eagerness to obtain a monopoly control over telegraphic communications in this country has been attested in so many startling ways, and his crooked methods of reaching desired ends are so well known that no exposure of sharp practices in getting the B. & O. Telegraph out of GARRETT's hands will surprise anybody who has kept the run of Mr. GOULD's transactions. But when one of these big railroad kings accuses another of over-reaching or robbing him the people only thank their stars that for once the twain were pitted against each other instead of combining against the public.

THE DECLINE OF DEMOCRACY.

The Democratic party has been understood to be opposed to the monopolies. There were no monopolies and no great, overshadowing moneyed corporations, such as we now have, in the earlier days of the Republic. The plutocracy of combined capital and large individual wealth is of modern growth in this country. Yet thoughtful statesmen nearly a century ago foresaw that the danger of combinations against the people's rights must come in one shape or another, and those whose minds were framed in a Democratic mold warned their countrymen against them.

In his farewell address, as long ago as 1796, Washington uttered this warning: "All combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of the fundamental principle of honest popular government and of fatal tendency."

However, combinations or associations of the above described may not then always be popular, and they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which "cunning, ambitious and unscrupulous men" will be enabled to "subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government."

Not a solitary word against the real danger of Monopoly, Plutocracy and Corruption!

This great Democratic Convention could laud the great National Administration to the skies, and yet had only this nonsensical, brainless twaddle to offer to the people on the great subject of the growing danger of corrupting monopolies and the abuse of corporations: For years, while monopoly was only a cloud in the future, Democratic statesmen and the Democratic party could utter ringing warnings against the evil. Now, when we are held almost at the mercy of monopoly and plutocracy, Democratic leaders are dumb!

Has the possession of power turned the Democracy in favor of great corporations and monopolies whose wealth is used in elections? Is the Democratic party no longer an anti-monopoly party? Is the support of corporate wealth regarded as a second-term necessity? Or why is it that, when monopoly is really an increasing peril, the party of the people has lost its vigor and has not a word to say against it?

be scrupulously protected from the encroachment of capital and the despotic greed of corporations."

In 1880 the National Democratic Convention declared:

"The Democratic party is the friend of labor and the laboring man, and pledges itself to protect him alike against the Cormorant and the Commune."

In 1881 the New York Democracy said:

"The public welfare demands that the various questions relating to chartered monopolies *** should be met and decided, and we are in favor of the adoption of measures to restrict the growing power of such monopolies."

In 1882 the New York Democrats spoke thus plainly:

"We charge that in this State the Republican party has *** made the Legislature the instrument of the lobby, and the friends of wealth and corruption. The public welfare demands that the various questions relating to chartered monopolies and the methods of transportation should be met and decided, and we are in favor of the adoption of measures to restrict the growing power of such monopolies."

In 1884 the Democratic party declared as follows:

"We favor all legislation that will tend to the equitable distribution of property, to the prevention of monopoly and to the strict enforcement of individual rights against corporate abuses; we hold that the welfare of society depends upon a scrupulous regard for the rights of property as defined by law."

This is the Democratic record against monopoly up to the time of its restoration to power in the Nation.

Now, what is the position of the Democracy of the first State of the Union—the State in which monopolies and corrupt corporations especially flourish?

The Democratic Convention of New York that recently met at Saratoga was worse than feeble, it was imbecile, on this great and ringing principle of the party handed down to us by WASHINGTON himself. Here is all these "statesmen" of 1884 had to say in their platform about corporations:

"That no more than ten hours shall be required for a day's work, and all corporations other than municipal should be required to pay their employees whose wages are by the day, once a week and in money."

Not a solitary word against the real danger of Monopoly, Plutocracy and Corruption!

This great Democratic Convention could laud the great National Administration to the skies, and yet had only this nonsensical, brainless twaddle to offer to the people on the great subject of the growing danger of corrupting monopolies and the abuse of corporations: For years, while monopoly was only a cloud in the future, Democratic statesmen and the Democratic party could utter ringing warnings against the evil. Now, when we are held almost at the mercy of monopoly and plutocracy, Democratic leaders are dumb!

Is the support of corporate wealth regarded as a second-term necessity? Or why is it that, when monopoly is really an increasing peril, the party of the people has lost its vigor and has not a word to say against it?

A BISMARCKIAN REMEDY.

In a prepared address before the Union League Club at Chicago Mr. HERMAN RASTER of the leading German paper in that city, took the ground that we ought to deal with Communism and Anarchism by depriving the State courts of the power to confer naturalization, and by charging the Federal Courts with a very strict enforcement of the requirements of the law with reference to proofs of residence, previous good character, etc.

Beyond that he pointed out as an example the recent expulsion of 30,000 Poles from Prussian Poland, and advocated a re-enactment of the old "Alien and Sedition" acts of 1798, which authorized the President to order out of the country such aliens as he might deem dangerous to the peace and safety of the United States, or whom he might suspect of being concerned in any treasonable or secret machinations.

Washington did not have Pacific Railroad monopolies, Standard oil monopolies and Jay Gould telegraph monopolies in his mind when he wrote these words. But were they not prophetic of the evils these "combinations and associations" would work? Have not such monopolies become "potent engines" by which "cunning, ambitious and unscrupulous men" have been enabled to "subvert the power of the people," to control elections, pollute the courts and purchase and corrupt legislation?

The Virginia resolutions denouncing the Alien and Sedition Act were adopted in 1798, and were said to have been written, with the accompanying address, by MADISON. They foreshadowed the evil of favored moneyed combinations, corporations and monopolies by branding as dangerous to the republic "fiscal systems and arrangements which would keep a host of commercial and wealthy individuals embodied and obedient to the mandates of the Treasury."

What would a statesman with MADISON's pure Democratic instincts have thought if he could have seen "a host of commercial and wealthy individuals," embodied in corporations and monopolies, issuing their mandate to the Treasury, and the Treasury accommodating its financial policy to the necessities of Wall street speculators?

In 1840 the Democrats assembled in convention at Baltimore and adopted a resolution denouncing a United States Bank, believing "such an institution one of deadly hostility to the best interests of the country, dangerous to our republican institutions and the liberties of the people, and calculated to place the business of the country within the control of a few persons."

Are there not plenty of monopolies and great corporations more dangerous than a United States Bank, which hold the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power?

In 1848 the Democrats, in their National Convention, resolved as follows:

"We feel that a high and sacred duty is devolved upon the Government to insure the safety of the people to sustain and advance among the people their constitutional liberty, equality and fraternality, by continuing to resist all monopolies and exclusive legislation for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many."

Are there not now plenty of monopolies and great corporations more dangerous than a United States Bank, which hold the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power?

In 1852 and 1856 this anti-monopoly plank was reinstated in the Democratic platform.

Coming down to a later date, when, under the fostering care of the Republican party, corporations had swelled and monopolies grown overshadowing, the Democrats of New York in 1878 declared in favor of

"No Government partnership with protected monopolies; corporations chartered by State always subject to State supervision in the interest of the people."

In 1879 the Democracy of New York thus spoke its sentiments:

"Democracy means the Government of the whole people for the whole people and by the whole people; but if any class is to receive special consideration it should be the working people whom all other governments oppress and crush."

A TALE OF SHAME.

The Legion of Honor Scandal Which Astounds the French People.

Mme. Limousin and Her Clever Partner, the Baroness De Kaula.

How the Baroness Entertained Poor Old Gen. De Cissey at Breakfast, While Clever Stenographers, Disguised as Servants, Copied State Papers and Furnished Them to the Germans—Mme. Limousin Paid as High as 100,000 Francs for a Legion of Honor Decoration—Gen. Caffarelli and the Count D'Andlau Implicated Beyond a Doubt—Grey's Son-in-Law, Dan Wilson, Deep in the Mire—Details of the Most Shameless Fraud That Frenchmen Ever Know.

Special Telegraphic Correspondence.
NEW YORK, October 15.—The Cross of the Legion of Honor, with its bit of red ribbon, has been presented to the principal aim and ambition of every Frenchman's life, according to the statutes of the order, which was founded by Napoleon I, it can only be conferred on civil and military Government officials of every rank after twenty years of meritorious service; on persons who by some notable deed of valor or conspicuous act of service to the State have rendered themselves worthy of receiving this much coveted reward. The statutes moreover provide that the number of the Official Gazette, which contains the nomination of the new Chevalier, shall likewise state distinctly the reason for which the cross has been conferred. Of late years, however, this record of honor has been continually neglected, and the enumeration of the causes for which the decoration has been granted is stirred over and united to the rather elastic phase, "Sorri-cess exceptions."

THE ORDER.
Is composed of five classes, ranging from Grand Cordon to Chevalier, and except in the case of foreigners, carries with it an annual pension. The members, besides enjoying special consideration and precedence, are entitled to numerous small privileges, including the military salute and the attendance of a detachment of troops at their funerals. It may be added that the members of the Legion of Honor are entitled to democratic rights. In its ranks are to be found Generals, Senators, Ministers, postmen, policemen, simple sailors and soldiers, doctors, artists, priests, and even Sisters of Mercy, who have distinguished themselves in the ambulances during the war. Until last week the public at large, although aware that a vast amount of corruption existed in official and political circles, were convinced that the Chancellery of the Legion of Honor was above suspicion. It may easily be imagined, therefore, how great the shock has been throughout the country, when the disgraceful act of Gen. Caffarelli and his accomplices became known.

THE SCANDAL.
has constituted a severe blow to the National pride and is bitterly resented, not only by the French, who are already suspicious of the order, but also by the millions of Frenchmen who hope to attain to the dignity thereof at some future day. The whole matter will probably result in a ministerial crisis, and possibly even in the resignation of the President of the Republic, whose son-in-law, M. Daniel Wilson, is thoroughly inculpated by the disclosures of little, hump-backed Mme. Limousin.

Although the name of Gen. Caffarelli, chief of the headquarters staff at the Ministry of War, is the one which has come most prominently before the public in connection with the scandal, yet he is far from being one of the principal actors. In fact, he was nothing but a mere tool.

In the hands of Madame Limousin, she, according to all accounts, is one of the most extraordinary women imaginable, and, notwithstanding her hump-backed shoulders, her yellow, parchment-like skin and false hair and teeth, seems to have held a large number of men, some of them even of the highest rank, in a state of blind submission and devotion to her person and her interests. The daughter of a German of family, a Herr Von Schoeneau, she was born and educated at Paris, and has been twice married. M. Limousin, her second husband, having been a retired provincial magistrate whose rank and position gave her the respectability which she so much desired, and her sister-in-law (with whom, however, she is not on speaking terms) is a lady in waiting to the reigning Grand Duchess of Baden. Until about five years ago Mme. Limousin resided at Vincennes, where there is always a very large number of officers in garrison. The latter were only too delighted to be received as guests in the hospitable house of the hump-backed little lady, whose witty and sparkling conversation made them forget her ugliness and her deformity. Many of the friendships thus formed proved of a lasting nature and Gen. Thibaudin, late Minister of War, Gen. Caffarelli and a host of other generals, Colonels and Captains were admitted until the time of her arrest, to be her faithful cavalier, servant and dupe when not tools. Mme. Limousin was the principal agent in the trap for the crosses.

TRAP FOR THE CROSSES.
of the Legion of Honor. The aspirants for the distinction were addressed to her as being a person possessing great influence in high places. This impression became confirmed in their minds when they saw purposefully scattered about in the lady's salons letters and cards from all kinds of prominent persons. Having discussed and obtained from the aspirant the sum which she required as an advance for the expenses to be incurred, she then placed herself in communication with Gen. Caffarelli and the other great personages who were interested in her little business. As a rule the aspirant, who had been extricated from a difficulty, would be cheater before he received his cross amounted to some 30,000 to 50,000 francs, although in some cases as much as 100,000 francs was charged and paid for the distinction. Of this sum Mme. Limousin received about 20 per cent as her own share, the remainder going to the personage who had been directly instrumental in obtaining the order. In a few cases where, notwithstanding the payments, it proved impossible to obtain the crosses, the disappointed aspirants were far too ashamed of their foolishness and vanity to care to incur the ridicule of a public exposure.

THE BARONESS DE KAULA.
It is well known that Mme. Limousin had been on terms of great intimacy with the infamous Baroness De Kaula, and that fact in itself should have been sufficient to warn every French officer from having any intercourse with her. Mme. De Kaula was a singularly lovely and captivating woman who, after the death of her first husband, who was an officer in the American Civil War, led a life of adventure in the various capitals of Europe until finally she found herself in Paris. Having made the acquaintance of Col. De Jung, the well-known military historian, she induced him to marry her, and thus became acquainted with the best kind of military society at the capital. As the wife of Col. De Jung she was a frequent and much-admired guest at the official reception of the Minister of War, Gen. De Cissey, who soon became deeply infatuated with her. Within a year after her marriage Col. De Jung, having discovered the real character of his wife left her in despair and refused to have any further dealings with her. It was not long before she became the mistress of old Gen. De Cissey. Occupying a pretty residence in the neighborhood of the Elysee, her lover used to make a point of dropping in to breakfast at her house on his way home from the usual weekly Cabinet Council at the Presidency. Receiving him in the most charming and sapient of negligees, she would insist on his leaving his hat, coat and ministerial portfolio in the salon before proceeding to join him in a tête-à-tête breakfast in the boudoir. Needless to add that he had put forth all her arts and grace for the purpose of prolonging the meeting, during the course of which he was surrounded by clever German stenographers, disguised as servants, took shorthand copies of every document containing in the General's ministerial portfolio. By these means Prince Blomberg, during a period of several consecutive years, was always acquainted with every subject which had been under discussion at the Paris Cabinet Council within a few hours after the latter had taken place. The little game might have gone on indefinitely had not the Baroness, emboldened by the success of her plot, founded herself one of the principal conspirators in the scheme belonging to the mobilization scheme of the French army. The disappearance of this valuable was discovered by mere chance a few weeks later, and the police had no difficulty in tracing the guilty to the Baroness. The latter was ignominiously expelled from France by the police while poor old Gen. De Cissey was forced to resign his seat in the Cabinet and to undergo the disgrace of a court-martial. Found guilty of gross indiscretion he was declared innocent of any intentional dishonesty or treason, and his sentence was commuted to a fine of 100 francs, being placed on the retired list of the army. It is a curious coincidence that Col. (now Gen.) De Jung, who has long since obtained a divorce from his unworthy wife, occupied the post of Military Secretary and Chief of Staff to Gen. Boulanger during the whole time the latter was Minister of War. In fact, many of the army reforms instituted by Boulanger, are due to De Jung, who is acknowledged as being one of the cleverest of French officers, but who, on account of the scandal attached to his name, prefers to keep in the background.

GEN. CAFFARELLI.
who, as stated above, was one of the principal tools of Mme. Limousin, is a grandson of the celebrated general of the same name who accompanied Napoleon to Egypt and was killed at the siege of Acre. His father, Count Caffarelli, was a prominent statesman during the reigns of King Louis Philippe and Napoleon III, and died in 1878. The member of the family who has now brought lasting disgrace on an honored name was formerly aide-de-camp to Napoleon III, distinguished himself in the Crimean, Italian and German campaigns possesses the cross of Commander of the Legion of Honor, received the epaulets of a General of Division for his services in the army of about 60 years of age, although his black and possibly dyed hair and mustache make him look younger, and he has spent forty years of his life in the service of his country. Until two years ago his conduct was as far as can be known irreproachable. He was, however, notoriously in debt and his residence at Paris and prominent rank at the Ministry of War necessarily involved further heavy outlays, which necessitated his appealing to his old Vincennes friend, Mme. Limousin, for assistance. Of the sentences pronounced upon him, it is evident that which orders him to be deprived of the Legion of Honor decorations and of his war medals and decorations. The confutation of these distinctions only occurs in the cases of persons convicted of crimes, entailing a degrading punishment and the loss for life of all rights and privileges of a French citizen. His case will now be taken in hand by the criminal law courts, which will most likely condemn him to a term of penal servitude for trial by a court martial.

BARON VON KREITMEYER,
the partner, secretary and lover of Mme. Limousin has a singularly unsavory history. He was born an infant in the Bay of Naples, but was descended and descended to a cousin of years' solitary confinement in a military prison in the year 1872 for having sold plans of German fortresses to the French War Office. On the expiration of his term of imprisonment he was expelled from German territory and made his way to Paris, where he has since been employed in the central office of the French spy system is called.

GEN. COUNT D'ANDLAU,
who is also a member of the Senate and of the House Committee of the Jockey Club, is one of the most distinguished officers of the French Army, and much surprise and sorrow is manifested on all sides at his complicity in the scandal. It is unfortunately beyond doubt that he has been even more deeply implicated in the plot than the Legation of Honor, the even Gen. Caffarelli and so completely above suspicion were his integrity and reputation that at first no credence was attached to rumors concerning his guilt. He entered the Army in 1842 and greatly distinguished himself at the siege of Sebastopol. For several years he held the post of military attaché to the French embassy at Vienna, and in 1870 was made one of the principal officers on the staff of Marshal Bazaine during the siege of Metz. On the fall of the latter place he was sent to Ham as a prisoner of war, and spent his leisure time there in writing an anonymous pamphlet attacking his former chief and exposing him in the most unscrupulous manner.

The Maxwell Appeal.
John I. Maxwell returned last night from Chicago. He found a letter awaiting him from his partner, F. W. Fauntroy, who has been in Washington on business connected with the Maxwell case. Mr. Fauntroy says the Supreme Court has relieved Maxwell of the clerk's fees, but has not yet decided the amount which he is to receive. He will have to pay for printing the record. The attorney, however, sees a chance for his client to escape his vex. Accident was the verdict at the inquest.

Fell From the Roof.
Fred Whetler, a German aged 20 years, a tinner in the employ of Nesker & Bro., galvanized iron workers, at No. 421 South Sixth street, while at work in the new St. Louis University building, Grand Avenue and Pine avenue, fell from the roof, from the top of the roof to the basement, a distance of 100 feet. He was taken to the City Hospital in an unconscious condition, but is still missing, however. There can be little doubt of his having had it on, a couple of the links of the chain of his belt broken, but nothing else.

Mexican Veteran Reunion.
By Telegraph to the Post-DISPATCH.
CARTHAGE, Mo., October 15.—The Jasper County Mexican Veterans' Association met in this city to-day, and after a pleasant reunion elected for the coming year J. R. Smith President and Reuben Rosser Secretary. A band of Mexican veterans, including some of the choicest style. This county will be represented at the Mexican Veterans' reunion to be held at Fort Worth, Tex., on November 10.

President Grey's "DAN."
Of Daniel Wilson, President Grey's son-in-law, it is difficult to say much. Even if his guilt were thoroughly proved it is scarcely likely that he would be brought to justice. The fact is that he is deeply incriminated in the matter. Many of his most intimate friends, who make themselves at home in his rooms at the Elysee palace, are actual specimens of the most questionable occupation on Chancery. It is known, however, that he has, during the past eighteen months, been in great straits for money, having incurred overwhelming losses on the Bourse, besides incurring considerable expenditure on behalf of the pretty actress, Jane Hading. President Grey must be heartily sick of his son-in-law by this time, for, unlike the "Dan" of President Cleveland, Daniel Wilson is an individual entirely devoid of tact. On several occasions he has been himself a target for the attacks of the Chamber of Deputies to head attacks which resulted in the overthrow of his father's Cabinet Ministers, while he had no compunction in doing from his residence at the presidential palace the circulars and business communications of the numerous shaky financial and industrial enterprises in which he is engaged.

WOOD'S LOCAL OPTION LAW.
A Test to Test the Constitutionality of the Measure.

By Telegraph to the Post-DISPATCH.

CARTHAGE, Mo., October 15.—Considerable interest is being felt here as to the probable outcome of the mandamus suit to be tried before the Supreme Court of this State next week, whereby the constitutionality of Wood's local option law will likely be settled. The County Court has referred to grant license to R. W. Wood, of this city, to sell beer, wine and porter at 12¢ per quart, and to put up all her art and grace for the purpose of prolonging the most, during the course of which she has been surrounded by clever German stenographers, disguised as servants, took shorthand copies of every document containing in the General's ministerial portfolio.

FAVORITES' DAY.

THE KNOWING ONES WIN AT JEROME PARK.

The Open Betting Season Closes—End of the Latonia Park Races—You Bet Places a Fast Mile—Donohue's Pugilistic Publism—The M. A. A. C. Sports This Afternoon—Choice Cycling Chat.

By Telegraph to the Post-DISPATCH.

NEW YORK, October 15.—The legal racing in this State ended to-day in a blaze of glory and a cloud of dust at Jerome Park. That is, the legal season as far as public betting is concerned, for under the provisions of the Ivespool Act, no person can bet on the Legislature last spring, betting on race tracks is illegal. From May 15, to October 15. The season thus ended has been not only a continuous one, but it has been an enormous success, not only for the associations catering to the racing public of this city. But it has been a great success for small owners. The comparative failure of the Dwyers, Hazen and Baldwin in the over-night races, and the defeat of their horses in many of the stables gave smaller owners a chance as will be seen when the statistic fields get in their fine work at the end of the season. Some claim that the bookmakers have had a hand in it, but for them, however, one shows a big profit. They have paid expenses, which a lump can be put down at $15,000 for each stand, of which not less than $10 a day has been paid to associations, which from sixty stands a day makes a nice total that must come out of the public before there can be any profit.

As to the crowd at Jerome to-day, it was a big one, so big that it put the railroad company to test to carry the crowd; that it enjoyed the racing, is shown by the fact that the four gateway handicaps were in turn won by favorites.

The first race was at seven furlongs. It had but four starters, and Hough's Mamie Hust won easily. She carried 125 pounds and won by a length in 1:31, with Harry Russell, second, Rosalind third and Wifred fourth. Hamilton rode the winner and in a style that carried the colored crowd away. He is in great feather just now having won the cake-walk prize at the colored race ball on Thursday night.

The second race was for year-olds at three-quarters of a mile. "Missouri" Jennings, George Oyster was the top weight at 121 pounds, with McDonald riding. He won easily, the money and was somewhat easily in the last fifty yards. Thoreau, at 98 pounds, was second, and Speedwell, at 101 pounds, third. The others were King Clark, Cascade, Omaha, Regulus, Umpire and Ben-digo. Speedwell is owned by Snapper Garrison, who is one reason why he did not ride Geo. Oyster. Another reason is that Jennings did not like the way the Snapper rode Oyster in Western when he was beaten by King Clark.

The third race was a mile and a furlong. Mr. Withers' Laggard at 106 pounds was a strong favorite. He took the lead to a good start and remained in front until the finish, the winner by two lengths in 1:58. Richmond at 117 pounds, was second, only a head in front of King of Norway, Royal Arch, Glendora and Arundel. Mr. Belmont's Lady Franklin was much fancied for the place, but she was badly ridden.

The fourth race was the race of the day. It was a dash of nine and half, with G. E. Lillard, at 104 pounds, and Mrs. McVoiante at 121 pounds, Haywood on Linden at 120 pounds, Church o' Leopards at 102 pounds, and the last named is one of Hon. H. Mexican's horses who have managed to finish last in all the races they have run. The Mexican is a favorite and an easy winner. It was but a gallop, time, 2:39½. Voilante was second, three-tenths of a length behind. Laggard pulled up, not striking a blow. The race ended the way it began.

The fifth, a selling race at three-quarters of a mile, was for two-year-olds at 100 pounds, with McDonald riding. He won easily, the money and was somewhat easily in the last fifty yards. Thoreau, at 98 pounds, was second, and Speedwell, at 101 pounds, third. The others were King Clark, Cascade, Omaha, Regulus, Umpire and Ben-digo. Speedwell is owned by Snapper Garrison, who is one reason why he did not ride Geo. Oyster. Another reason is that Jennings did not like the way the Snapper rode Oyster in Western when he was beaten by King Clark.

The sixth race was a mile and a furlong. Mr. Withers' Laggard at 106 pounds was a strong favorite. He took the lead to a good start and remained in front until the finish, the winner by two lengths in 1:58. Richmond at 117 pounds, was second, only a head in front of King of Norway, Royal Arch, Glendora and Arundel. Mr. Belmont's Lady Franklin was much fancied for the place, but she was badly ridden.

The seventh race was the race of the day. It was a dash of nine and half, with G. E. Lillard, at 104 pounds, and Mrs. McVoiante at 121 pounds, Haywood on Linden at 120 pounds, Church o' Leopards at 102 pounds, and the last named is one of Hon. H. Mexican's horses who have managed to finish last in all the races they have run. The Mexican is a favorite and an easy winner. It was but a gallop, time, 2:39½. Voilante was second, three-tenths of a length behind. Laggard pulled up, not striking a blow. The race ended the way it began.

The eighth race was a mile and a furlong. Mr. Withers' Laggard at 106 pounds was a strong favorite. He took the lead to a good start and remained in front until the finish, the winner by two lengths in 1:58. Richmond at 117 pounds, was second, only a head in front of King of Norway, Royal Arch, Glendora and Arundel. Mr. Belmont's Lady Franklin was much fancied for the place, but she was badly ridden.

The ninth race was the race of the day. It was a dash of nine and half, with G. E. Lillard, at 104 pounds, and Mrs. McVoiante at 121 pounds, Haywood on Linden at 120 pounds, Church o' Leopards at 102 pounds, and the last named is one of Hon. H. Voilante was second, three-tenths of a length behind. Laggard pulled up, not striking a blow. The race ended the way it began.

The tenth race was the race of the day. It was a dash of nine and half, with G. E. Lillard, at 104 pounds, and Mrs. McVoiante at 121 pounds, Haywood on Linden at 120 pounds, Church o' Leopards at 102 pounds, and the last named is one of Hon. H. Mexican's horses who have managed to finish last in all the races they have run. The Mexican is a favorite and an easy winner. It was but a gallop, time, 2:39½. ## A CLEVER TRICK.

The Auburn Penitentiary Officers Duped by an Old Crackman.

By Telegraph to the Post-DISPATCH.
NEW YORK, October 15.—A sharp trick was recently played on the officers of the Auburn penitentiary. Jimmy Hope, the noted crackman, who has been mixed up in more big and daring bank robberies than any man living, is now an inmate of that institution. It cost the State of New York over $4,000 to bring him back after the expiration of his term at San Quentin, Cal., to stand trial in New York, where he had spent some years ago by decamping. He is now an old man, but the police authorities have not been able to get him to talk, so they put their hands on him, for through him they expect to be able to get hold of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of bonds which were issued by the Manhattan Savings Institution of this city years ago. Hope, it is said, was undoubtedly the leader of the gang which carried off the bank at the corner of Bleeker st. and Broadway. Several millions of securities were recovered, but nothing like $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of bonds has ever been traced.

DUPLICATE BILLS WERE ISSUED

for the missing ones, but the bank still gives an account of the Government and its still holds. Four or five men have been tried for complicity in the robbery, but only two were convicted. They are serving life sentences. Sing Sing a year ago last summer, after serving ten years' sentence, and Johnnie Hope, son of Jimmy, is not yet convicted. He is serving his time in the long and expensive litigation to obtain custody of the latter in California, he was brought to several months ago. He was a prisoner in San Quentin, the same as police headquarters by Inspector Byrne, who worked up the bank robbery case, and was sent to the Auburn prison at the same time. Only a short time ago a well-dressed man of good appearance applied to the Warden of the penitentiary to speak to him. He represented himself to be a relative who had come a long distance and was anxious to have his son released from the walls he has been and not seen for many years. The request being granted, the pair chatted for an hour, and then the stranger went away. Well, he was none other than "BILLY" KELLY.

and had been approached to have some correspondence to the dispensaries along similar lines for bonds and arrangements for the defense of Hope, who is expected will be tried for the Manhattan Savings robbery. At the same time, after Kelly's visit that the prison authorities discovered his identity. Kelly left without calling for a writ in contravention of prison rules to permit an ex-convict to visit the institution, but special orders had been given that under no circumstances would any man be allowed to communicate with any of his old gang. Hope himself was the only one accidentally let out to the outside to talk to Kelly. Kelly had written to the penitentiary that Kelly had been to see him. The strangest thing about it all is that nobody knew where Kelly had been to. It had elicited a great deal of public interest at the time, and his picture was sent all over the country.

MARRIED AT FIFTEEN,

But She Had Tired of Her Husband and Would Not Marry Him.

At the Union Depot last evening a young woman about 18 years of age was noticed struggling to get away from a man considerably older than herself. He was attempting to drag her toward a train and appeared to be assisted by a couple of women and a man. An officer who came up took the man and woman in charge and brought them to the Four Courts. There the woman stated that her name was Faida Macker, and that the man was her husband, William M. Macker. She had married him when she was only 15 years of age, and he had since failed to support her. Now she had tired of him and wanted him to leave her and she had to leave him. Lately she had been working at Sixth and Walnut streets, and the day before yesterday she made the bid for her freedom by stating that she was to leave the city last evening. She went to the depot to see him off and he refused to take her. She is the sister of a man who is aiding him. Macker was locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

Miss Belle Hunt Discusses an Irrerent Congregation With some Plain Talk.

By Telegraph to the Post-DISPATCH.

NICHOLASVILLE, Ky., October 15.—Miss Belle Hunt has been conducting a series of revival meetings at Sulphur Well, near here. Last night, when the church was crowded, she rose in the pulpit and said: "I believe that you all came here for fun, and care nothing for religion. You may as well waste my time on you." She then dismissed the congregation without benediction and went home.

says in his letter to his customers to-day: "The apprehension during the past several months in mercantile circles in reference to the money pressure, and the consequent flurry in the market, has compelled the Government to import $30,000,000 worth of gold, has caused a liquidation in all commodities and properties carried on small margins, has caused stocks to be reduced in price at least 25 per cent on an average, wheat from 35 to 68 cents, coffee and cotton in a similar way, and occasioned a panic in Chicago and San Francisco. Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia and New York have as well really passed through the panic ordeal of over-indulgence in liquor. Mr. Persiani was another in line of Gen. Dandy and highly connected. His family visiting in New York have been notified."

THE most important effect will be to stop railroad building. The new year will be remarkable for as little railroad construction as this year has been for its excess. The demand for money will gradually grow less.

By Telegraph to the Post-DISPATCH.

WALL STREET, NEW YORK, October 15.—The week closes here with a depressed and feverish stock market, and a vague feeling of uncertainty as to the opening on Monday. The bear element is undoubtedly on top of the heap, but still the bull combination holds to a certain extent. The latter claims that the strength of the bears has been expended, and that the time has at last been reached when the public can buy with safety with the expectation of higher prices in the near future. They say that notwithstanding all the discouraging prophecies of those who would depress prices the country was never in a more prosperous condition; that the generally increased earnings of the railroads are based upon a legitimate traffic, which will increase rather than decrease, and that the hitherto great bulge of tight money has been eliminated as an important factor. These and other arguments of a similar nature, they keep on repeating now as they have been doing for some time, but just the same with the exception of an occasional upward reaction their holdings have decreased in value almost daily. They have held on, however, like grim death and still preserve a bold front, although they have not gathered force enough yet to organize an aggressive campaign. Jay Gould, from his stronghold in the Western Union Building, smiles his quiet smile and talks busily and his clique follow suit. His most prominent slogan is:

"SAGE, SAGE, SAGE."

THE DEPEW INTERVIEW

A St. Louis newspaper man has caused more disturbance than he or Taylor caused upon when he wrote the now-celebrated interview with Chauncey Mr. Depew. It was printed in your city and was telegraphed to certain papers here, who published it in a prominent position with starting head-lines. On Thursday the market was strong, with a pronounced upward tendency and a large covering of the short interest. Many thought that the buying from out of town and London indicated that confidence was being restored and the long-predicted bull market had begun, but this was not the case.

Fidelity Bank remained what Chauncey Mr. Depew was reported as saying to some St. Louis reporter, a chance came upon the spirit of their dreams. The market opened off. A bear raid was made and for a time there was perfect bedlam. Holdings were dumped on the market right and left, London got scared and cabled orders to sell and it seemed as though nothing could stem the tide. These holdings came to a large extent from legitimate investors who had become frightened, and all because some reporter had quoted some of the most prominent men in the business as predicting a panic that would sweep the country like a cyclone. Mr. Depew was traveling eastward from St. Louis, and frantic efforts were made to catch him at various points. Anxious messengers hurried to the Grand Central station to inquire what the Vanderbilt was doing. Arkansas' Representative, Wants St. Louis First and Chicago Second.

Col. S. W. Fordyce, President of the St. Louis, Arkansas & Texas Railroad, who was appointed in place of S. E. Cockerill, Jr., resigned, to represent Arkansas in the committee, is not in the city, but is traveling over his road. He was wired on the line of the road for his choice, and the following brief but satisfactory answer was received:

LEPERIN, Tex., October 15.—First choice, St. Louis; second, Chicago. S. W. FORDYCE.

J. G. PRATHER,

Missouri, Wants St. Louis First, Last and All the Time.

Of the choice of Col. J. G. Prather, the Missouri member of the National Democratic Committee, there is no question. When asked by a POST-DISPATCH reporter what he thought of bringing the Convention to St. Louis, he said he heartily favored the project, and would do all in his power to secure the convention for the city. He is for it all the time.

HAILEY, Idaho, October 15.—J. D. Roxborough, Utah's representative on the National Democratic Committee, in an interview to-day on the subject of the location of the National Convention, said he prefers St. Louis as the place for holding the Convention.

JOHN H. DENNIS.

St. Louis Is Well Liked By the Nevada Member.

By Telegraph to the POST-DISPATCH.

SALT LAKE, Utah, October 15.—John H. Dennis, the member of the National Democratic Committee from Nevada, says: "My constituents are well satisfied with the choice of St. Louis. They have had good word somehow in Ohio, or at least in some doubtful state. I think it might possibly aid in the carrying of the doubtful states. St. Louis would suit me as well as any city in the Union. Gen. Horatio C. King of New York has my proxy, and I will probably leave the matter entirely with him, after consulting with the other members of the committee. He will be able to determine better than myself what would be the best interests of the party."

H. P. Gray Resigns From the Board of Fire Underwriters.

Members of the Board of Fire Underwriters were notified yesterday that H. P. Gray was no longer a member of the Board and the members of the Board, according to Board rules, were not allowed to do business with him. This is the second of the old men killed. Kimball, who also represented in this city a number of insurance companies not members of the Board. Accordingly agents who belong to the Board are not permitted to do business with him. Gray was a comparatively new member of the Board. Recently he was found to have done business with Kimball and the Board fined him $1,000. He appealed, and after protest and finally, becoming disgusted with the restrictions placed upon him by the Board, he, yesterday, sent in his resignation.

Sister Jones' Precaution.

From the Boston Courier.

A party of Deep Water Baptists held a service on the Canadian River bank, opposite the head of Grand Island, last Sunday. There were more than 1,000 people present. One of them was afraid of drowning and she had her suit lined with cork from neck to heels, but she didn't say anything about it. This minister, who was a student, and it came Sister Jones' to be immersed. The minister waded out into the stream, leading the water by the hand and repeating the ritual. The water was waist deep. Sister Jones had much difficulty in keeping her feet on the bottom and the deeper she waded the more difficult it became. But she did not want to say anything.

All at once, however, she slipped took her off her feet and she sank to the bottom of the surface of the water. The minister grabbed her and tried to pull her under the water. The current was every instant dragging her out. The minister, who was trying to fair convert, who was herself struggling to assume an upright position, but without success. The water was up to her chest and it came Sister Jones' to be immersed. The minister waded out into the stream, leading the water by the hand and repeating the ritual. The water was waist deep. Sister Jones had much difficulty in keeping her feet on the bottom and the deeper she waded the more difficult it became. But she did not want to say anything.

A few days ago I lived at Ste. Germain-En-Laye and often visited Sardou's residence at Marly, not far from the birthplace of Louis XIV. One day, with a friend, I heard the great winter give an account of his early struggles. He is a most charming causeur, but delighted in nothing more than a monologue.

"I suffered when young from want, but more than all, from wounded pride. They did not wish my plays. They would not receive me. Many a time have I been turned away from their doors and gone home in despair to find plump pockets."

"LA TOSCA."

THE LATEST PLAY OF SARDOU, THE FRENCH DRAMATIST.

Baroness Salvador Astonishes the Maîtres by Revealing the Plot of His New Drama, Religiously Kept Secret—Time and Story of the Work—Sardou's Early Trials and Ultimate Success—Made Famous by a Shoemaker.

Special Telegraphic Correspondence.
PARIS, October 4.—"You wish me to tell you about my new play? I hope not, for I have refused to give the slightest information to my nearest and dearest friends, who, I assure you, have not been very modest in asking questions."

Thus said M. Victorien Sardou, a few days ago as I chance, I met him at the house of a friend.

"Not one question shall I ask," I replied. "But you like to tell me what I believe, yes, what I know—is the plot, the unfolding, the denouement of 'La Tosca'?"

"Ah! Is it hypnotism or second sight, or have I been betrayed?" said the great dramatist, as he folded his arms and prepared to listen with resignation to my idea of 'La Tosca'."

The plot is laid in Rome, and begins the day after the battle of Marengo. La Tosca is a famous singer, whose lover was named Mario. Mario has a friend who

CONSPIRES AGAINST THE POPE.

The police aware of the fact, wish to make a master stroke. La Tosca gives the grand ball and both Mario and his friend are arrested. Act three brings us to the prison castle of San Angelo where La Tosca is also confined. It is supposed that she will testify against Mario, who is imprisoned in the adjoining cell. They torture him, but he refuses to confess. The Judge, at the same time, questions La Tosca, and she also expresses her ignorance of the conspiracy. The inquisitors become more and more ferocious as they continue to torture Mario, and each time he is brought before the Judge, he is forced to stand up and confess. La Tosca is also confined. It is supposed that she does not know that Mario's friend is a conspirator—what is not true—that Mario also has conspired. Brought before the judges, Mario is told of the accusation made by La Tosca, and he curses the faithless woman.

"In the final act, La Tosca implores pardon for the innocent Mario, through her instrumentality condemned to death. The Minister listens, and lets La Tosca see that he loves her ardently, passionately; does she love in return? If so, Mario is pardoned."

CONSPICUOUS.

but, after ascertaining her secret for Mario's safety, she stabs the Minister with a dagger. She hastens to the prison, only to find that the villain has signed a "bougu" pardon. At that moment she hears the death knell of the condemned man, and maddened with despair she throws herself from the window."

DURING MY RECITAL I CAREFULLY STUDIED THE CHANGE OF EXPRESSION IN M. SARDOU'S FACE, AND NOTICED THAT HIS ASTONISHMENT BECAME MORE AND MORE INTENSE. AT THE END I SAID:

"THAT IS 'LA TOSCA.'"

"WITH A FEW CORRECTIONS, IT IS. BUT WHO TOLD YOU THAT HAS BEEN ACCURATELY CORRECTED?"

THIS IS A CASE OF WONDERFUL MASTERY; AND HOW I DIVINED THE PLOT OF YOUR DRAMA IS A MYSTERY TO ME, AS IT IS TO YOU."

"YOU HAVE SO NEARLY GUessed IT THAT IT WOULD BE WRONG IN ME NOT TO MAKE THE CORRECTIONS NECESSARY. AT THE TIME OF 'LA TOSCA' THERE WAS NO POPE IN ROME; PLUS VI. HAD DIED A CAPTIVE IN FRANCE. THE ETERNAL CITY WAS OCCUPIED BY THE AUSTRIANS. THEY WISHED A POPE TO BE ONLY AN INSTRUMENT IN THEIR HANDS."

TO THIS TRUTH THE ROMANS WOULD NOT SUBMIT, AND THE STREETS WERE FILLED WITH CONSPIRATORS. MY DRAMA OCCUPIES THE TIME BETWEEN THE ARRIVAL OF THE DEATH OF BERNARDINI, WHO BROUGHT THE NEWS OF HIS DEATH, AND THE DAY WHEN THE OVERthrow OF THE AUSTRIANS AT MARENGO—ABOUT TEN HOURS. THE PLAY IS VERY SIMPLE; THERE ARE ONLY FOUR IMPORTANT ROLES, AND NO MISE-EN-SCENE SCENE WORTH MENTIONING. ATTER LA TOSCA AND MARIO, THE PRINCIPAL PERSONAGE IS MARIO'S FRIEND, THE MUSICIAN, PAISIELLO. I GIVE A ROLE OF CONSEQUENCE ALSO TO THE MOTHER OF QUEEN MARIE AMELIE, MARIE CAROLINE OF NAPLES."

THE REHEARSALS FOR "LA TOSCA" TAKE PLACE EVERY DAY AT THE ST. MARTIN IN THE PRESENCE ONLY OF AQUINO, MANAGER OF THE THEATER. MAURICE GRAN, SARAH BERNHARDT'S PROTESSOR, IS A FAIR CONVERT, WHO WAS HERSELF STRUGGLING TO ASSUME AN UPRIGHT POSITION, BUT WITHOUT SUCCESS. THE ACTRESS, WHO IS ALREADY SEVEN MONTHS PREGNANT, IS A FAIR CONVERSION OF HIS DEPTH, AND SCREAMED FOR HELP, BUT NO ONE OFFERED TO COME OUT; THE COUPLE WENT TO BED, HE LONGED FOR SOMETHING, SHE LONGED FOR SOMETHING, AND HE SHRIEKED LIKE A STEAM CALLIOPE, ONLY SHRIEKED THE LOUDER, AND HE SLIPPED DOWN THE RIVER, HE COULD NOT TOUCH BOTTOM. WITH A SUPERHUMAN EFFORT, HE SWIMMED ON TO HIS FAIR RAFT, AND WHILST HE HELD HIS ARMS UP IN VICTORY, HE WAS NOW FADING INTO MERO SPEAKS.

Nellie Brown's Experiences in an Insane Asylum.

Horrible Stories of Cruelty Practiced on Blackwell's Island.

Continuation of the New York World's Exposure of the Treatment of Patients in a Public Mad-House—The First Meal in the Institution—Food Too Disgusting to Eat Served to Helpless Lunatics—An Ice-Cold Bath—Sleeping on a Board-of-Health Bed—Unfeeling and Inhuman Nurses—Hair-Combing Extraordinary—Teasing, Beating and Choking Helpless Women—A Story Full of Pathetic Interest.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, October 15.—The second installment of Nellie Brown's remarkable story of her experiences as an amateur in an insane ward on Blackwell's Island will appear in the SUNDAY WORLD. It will undoubtedly create a sensation. The harsh treatment of the poor women confined in the institution is described from personal observation. Nellie Brown's story will doubtless compel a thorough investigation into the conduct of the nurses and doctors who are allowed to treat the patients confined to their care as simply human cattle. The asylum authorities are evidently on the anxious seat. It is generally assumed that they are responsible for a long article published yesterday in the Sun in which the doctors, nurses and attendants endeavor to get the first lining. They try to answer Nellie Brown's charges advanced. Six columns of the Sun are devoted to official excuses and apologies. Editorially:

"THE WORLD DATES THIS MORNING: 'The anxiety of physicians, nurses, and the asylum attendants to whitewash themselves in advance is quite natural, but the public will only be all the more anxious now to read of the actual experiences of the plucky woman who was not only able to deceive the experts, but who was held to be of unsound mind for more than a week, though acting in the most rational manner. We can promise the public that the SUNDAY WORLD'S story will repay perusal, and that after it is digested there may be work for the grand jury. At the same time we take our stand. So far as concerns its little band of readers that matters of interest are taking place in this community and that the World must be looked to for the details."

The following are the main points of Nellie Brown's remarkable story, as told in her own way. She prefaches the account of her experience amusingly by telling how one of the young doctors had her weight and measure taken while he was flinging a female attendant and appointing a rendezvous.

A TOUGH CHARITY MEAL.

She thus describes her first meal in the asylum: We were marched into a long, narrow dining-room, where a rush was made for the table. The table reached the length of the room and was uncovered and uninviting. Long benches without backs were put for the patients to sit on, and over these they had to crawl in order to face the table. Placed close together all along the table were large dressing bowls filled with a plain, tasteless porridge which the patients called tea. By each bowl was laid a small saucer containing five prunes accompanied by bread. One fat woman made a rush, and jerking up several saucers from those around her, emptied their contents into her own saucer. Then while holding to her own bowl she lifted up another and drained its contents at one gulp. This she did to a second bowl in shorter time than it takes to tell it. Indeed, I was so amused at her successive grabbings that when I looked at my own saucer the woman opposite, without so much as "by your leave," grabbed mine, too. It did not require much time for the patients to eat all that was established on the table, and then we at our orders to form in line in the hall. When this was done the doors before us were unlocked, and we were ordered to proceed back to the sitting-room.

AN ICE-COLD BATH.

We were then taken into a cold, wet bath-room and I was ordered to undress. Did I protest? Well, I never grew so earnest in my life as when I tried to be off. They said if I did not they would use force, and that it would not be very gentle. At this I noticed one of the craziest women in the ward standing by the door with a large bucket in her hands. She was chattering away to herself, and chuckling in a manner which seemed to me fiendish. I knew now what was to be done with me and I shivered. They began to undress me, and one by one they pulled off my clothes. At last everything was gone excepting one garment. "I will not remove it," I said vehemently, but they took it off. I gave one glance at the group of patients gathered at the door watching the scene, and I jumped into the bath-tub with more energy than grace. The water was ice cold and gain't been. How useless it all was! I begged at last that the patients be made to give it away, but they refused to shut up. The crazy woman began to scrub me. I can find no other word than will express it but scrubbing. From a small tin pan she took some soft-soap and rubbed it all over me, even all over my face and my pretty hair. I was at last past seeing or speaking, although I had begged that my hair be left untouched. Rub, rub, went the old woman, chattering to herself. My teeth chattered and my limbs were goose-fleshed and shivering. I had to get out, got out, after three blankets of wet ice over my head—ice-cold water, too—into my eyes, my ears, my nose and my mouth. I think I experienced some of the sensations of a drowning person as they dragged me gasping, shivering and quaking from the tub. For once I did look insane, as they pummeled, dripping wet, into a short canton dinner slip, labeled across the extreme end in large black letters, "Lunatic Asylum, B. I. H. S." The letters meant "Blackwell's Island, Hall 6." By this time Miss Mayard, the patient who had been undressed and washed, I hated my recent bath, I would have taken another, but I could have saved her the experience. Imagine pinching that sick girl into a cold bath when it made me, who have never been ill, shake as if withague.

A BOARD OF HEALTH BED.

I was hurried into a room where there were six beds, and had been put into bed when some one came along and jerked me out again, saying: "Nellie Brown has to be put in a room alone-to-night, for I suppose she's noisy." I was taken to room No. 28 and left to lie and make an impression on the bed. It was an impossible task. The bed had been made high in the center and sloping on either side. At the first touch my head touched the pillow with water, and my wet slip transferred some of its dampness to the shirt. When Miss Gruber came in I asked if I could not have a nightgown. "We have no such thing in this institution," she said.

"I do not like to sleep without one," I replied.

"Well, I don't care about that," she said. "You are in a public institution now, and you can't expect to get anything. This is charity, and you should be thankful for what you get."

"But the city pays to keep these places up," I urged, "and days people to be kind to the unfortunate brought here."

"Well, you don't need to expect any kindness here, for you won't get it," she said, and went out of the room.

THE RIDE AWAKENING.

Just as morning began to dawn I went to sleep. It did not seem many moments until I was rudely awakened and told to get up, the window being opened and the clothing pulled off me. My hair was still wet and I had pains all through me as if I had the rheumatism. Some clothing was flung on the floor, and I was told to put it on. I asked for my own, but was told to take what I got and keep quiet by the apparently headless nurse, Miss Gruber. I saw the other patients lying in past in the dark. I decided not to lose any time that might be gained. We entered the dining-room, and I was given a certain amount of time to get dressed. ## SHORTHAND.

Testimonials from J. H. Barton, Editor of "Short-Hand Free," Carbuncle, etc.

I wish to convey a testimonial to the St. Louis-Dupont Shorthand Institute. In April last my son, John L., began taking shorthand lessons by mail, and in August, he was admitted to the Illinois Normal University, with five studies, and giving his time to the study of shorthand. Therefore his opportunity to learn shorthand was limited to the time he had free. In the summer term he went to St. Louis and took a course in shorthand at the St. Louis Institute ten weeks; on his return home he was appointed to the St. Louis office of the Carbuncle & Dierck. He began his duties September 1, and after a thorough trial was promoted well qualified, and in a short time became a valuable member of the firm. O. A. Harzke, the boy is not 18 years of age. In all he devoted less than five months to the study, fully convinced that he could learn shorthand in a shorter time than could be spared from his studies. We are delighted to say that he is now a valuable member of the firm; he receives a salary of $5 per day, with additional remuneration for transcription. The St. Louis Institute has a good name and each learned, and has proved itself to be superior to any other school of shorthand in the country. Many of young people who are trying to work themselves up in the world, and who will, we trust, find the St. Louis Institute a place to go to, entering the new and inviting field, opening up to them a wide range of opportunities. The St. Louis Institute is highly entitled to the favorable mention we have made of it. J. H. Barton.

Young men and women, in particular, are learning the old "short-hand despatch" system; when you can learn it, you can learn it quickly, easily, and inexpensively, most rapid and logical system in the world, and the only one successfully taught by mail. Illustrations of the system, and a complete course, may be had for mail for 2 cents. Address W. O. Meier, President and Principal, 1105 Olive street, St. Louis.

THREE LITTLE MAYORS.

BEING A COMIC OPERA DESCRIPTION OF THE SITUATION AT THE CITY HALL.

Dramatis Personae: Mayor Francis and Acting Mayors Allen and Bannerman—President Cleveland, Sergeant McGraw, Daniel Lamont and Sundry Members of the Hendricks Association—Some New Songs to Old Tunes.

SCENE I.
Eleventh street front of the City Hall—Francis, Allen and Bannerman and Koko McGraw—They advance with a Titipu giggle and sing the following:SONG BY FRANCIS: And ALLEN AND BANNERMAN:
Three Little Mayors are we so gay,
One is the Mayor when the other's away;
And if both are off it is Bannerman's day.
Three little Mayors are we!FRANCIS: One little Mayor is Mustache Davy.
ALLEN: Another little Mayor owns the silent paws.BANNERMAN: And the third little Mayor is quite a quare.ALL THREE: He, he, he, he!
Three little Mayors are we.Three little Mayors all so crazy,
We nearly drive each other crazy,
And each one thinks that he's a dandy,

Three little Mayors are we!

Three little Mayors are we!

Enter Koko with retinue of citizens who want railroad passes or seek to get friends out of the Work-house.]
KOKO [Addressing Francis]: Your Honor, as you happen to be at home to-day, and the care of State rest upon your shoulders, I take pleasure in informing you that his elegant ribs, the Mikado of the United States, is packing his grip for a trip hitherward.

FRANCIS: That's all right.

KOKO [With a Baconian tilt of his left eye-brow]: Aye, marry, even so.

FRANCIS: Then I must fix my schedule so as to be in the city for the next week or two, or one of these ducks will capture this unexpected honor which I am about to have thrust upon me—of entertaining the great Democratic Mikado and acquiring a little grease for my gubernatorial bootle.

ALLEN [Aside]: I wonder if I can't have Francis called to New York to work some time, give him a fall with the Wall Street magnates.

BANNERMAN [Aside]: Here's my chance. Get Francis out of the way and then send Allen a telegram that an explosion has occurred in his silicate quarry and blown the whole business to pieces. With both of them out of town I hold the reins of government in my own hands and then I can set 'em up for the Mikado in a way that will make his head whirl.

FRANCIS [To Ko-Ko]: Tell him Jeffersonians to come along and make no noise in his house during his sojourn in St. Louis. We'll put a set in the kitchen for the servant girl and he can have the run of the whole top floor.

ALLEN [Interposing]: But, your Honor, how about my hotel? We run that hotel to make money, and when anybody comes along that can pay our rates it's hard to the square thing to run him up against a free fake of the kind that you suggest.

FRANCIS [Coldly]: What is your hotel to my boomer?

ALLEN [Haughtily]: I am proud to say that they're not bad.

FRANCIS [Sarcastically]: And they never will be. When you were Mayor for a few minutes you did not consult my wishes, and you can't expect me to drum for your hotel.

ALLEN: And neither did Jim Bannerman consider my feelings when the mantle of office fell upon his shoulders.

BANNERMAN: You bet I didn't.

KOKO [Coming forward]: Gentlemen, you are going too far.

ALLEN: He's not going far enough. [Aside.] I wish him to go to New York or some other distant resort.

KOKO: Yes, gentlemen, you are going too far entirely; you are getting your selves into a mess. [Sings.]

Here's a how-de-do!
Pity tis' tis true,Three fine gentlemen for Mayors
Load down with lordly air,
Bossing bold McGraw!
He's a how-de-do!FRANCIS: Here's a pretty mess,
Barrels of distress.I can't go across the river
And return, but I riskerAll the time to do it,
Here's a pretty pest!ALLEN: Here's a state of things!
Francis won't take wings
And escape to distant clime;

Till I rule as city's prime;

While old Cleveland swings,
Here's a state of things!

BANNERMAN: This is rather tough!

One May's alnt enough;

But the two must hang around me,

And with presence confound me;

Filling Cleve with guff.

This is rather tough!

ENSEMBLE: With a passion, that's intense

On our own selves we are stuck,

And it makes us feel immense

When we strike a run of luck.

But when tangles ensue,

Like this present Cleveland stew,

Here's a pretty state of things!

Here's a pretty how-de-do!

KOKO [To all the Mayors generally]: Well, what are you going to do about it?

FRANCIS: My mind's made up; I shall entertain the Mikado at my palatial home in Vandeverne place.

ALLEN: And I shall take pleasure in giving him the privilege of the toothpick box on the clerk's desk of the Southern.

BANNERMAN: And I shall strain a point and introduce him to Dame Caruth.

Who holds the keys of Billy Kunz' Academy.

Defer, defer,

To the noble Lord High Executioner;

A personage of flesh and modesty,

A dignified and potent officer,

Who holds the keys of Billy Kunz' Academy.

Cleve, Cleve,

Behold the Lord High Executioner;

Behold the Lord High Execution

MEETING MAX

MAGOOGIN INTRODUCES THE IROQUOIS CLUB TO THE LITTLE TRUNKER.

A Few New and Startling Facts Concerning the Removal of Preller—This is Maxwell's First Offense—The Death Penalty From a Humanistic Standpoint—A Brilliant Conversation.

SYMPATHY and curiosity go hand in hand down the rosy paths of life, and it pleases me to be able to state that I recently met a number of them and have a good time at no greater expense to myself and the world at large than a slight damage to my own feelings and an almost-inappreciable disturbance of my usual confidence in the humanity of human nature. It was a balmy, breathless morning last week when a committee of the Iroquois Club of Chicago, Ill., a sedate, aristocratic meeting on the western edge of Kerry Patch and asked me to secure them tickets of admission to the fashionable Maxwell receptions then going on in the City Jail.

"We do not want to leave your beautiful city," said the head gulf-giver "without seeing some of the institutions which have made you so justly famous abroad, and, myself, with swelling emotion, 'we believe Maxwell is the one paternal and perennial monument of which you are much prouder than any other."

I stole a glance at his voice to see if there was any irony in its tone, but though it had a hard metallic ring, I attributed this to the brassiness of the regulation Chicago countetion of garden-hose with which to do the hypodermic business.

The members of the Iroquois Club were on hand promptly at the City Jail, and so was I. Jaller Calahan mistook us for a rescuing party and wanted to call out the Attack Guards to disperse us, but a few words of excited explanation settled his qualms and he admitted us, with a sort of statement to the turnkey that he didn't know exactly who we were.

It is their post mortem, as now, he will have a chance of going to his grave with his bones intact and no slashes of the dissecting knife in the nape of his neck.

I am sorry for Maxwell and I told him so, but he said he didn't think it would do him much good.

He felt very much hurt when I assured him that the newspapers had printed the truth about President and Mrs. Cleveland being in the same bed, and he was soon nursing the notion that it was simply a journalistic "fake," and that they hadn't been here at all. The injury which he sustained, when said he felt hurt, arose from the now newly-acquired knowledge of the fact that the Clevelands had been in town and had not been around to see him.

Maxwell stubbornly refused to use my hypodermic hose on several members of the Iroquois Club, whom I freely offered for the sacrifices, but he consented to show us how he had truncked the unfortunate Preller, at the same time manifesting no objection to the use of my trunk for the trial.

The procedure was very simple. He laid me on the Captain's desk, and placing the trunk beside it gently rolled it off. Then he put his heel in the pit of my stomach and softly squeezed me in.

After that he sprang cat-like on the roof of the trunk and bore down on it as if it were the platform of a weighing machine.

From a human standpoint the test could scarcely be called a success; at any rate it did not succeed as the Preller test, for if Maxwell had left Preller's head and hands sticking out of the trunk, as he left mine, Preller might have had some show for his wife alone.

He could have yelled "Fire" or frightened a chambermaid or done some other silly thing to call attention to his pernicious position.

Maxwell enjoyed standing on my neck much more than I enjoyed it.

"Yes," I remarked humorously, "we want to see Maxwell and die."

"You'll wish you had died first," the turnkey replied, as he jerked the jail door open, and without waiting to dispute this assertion we started out of our trunk, and without paying duty on it, or subjecting it to a court inspection, a la Mrs. Frank Leslie's in gag, and soon stood face to face with the popular and talented young murderer, Mr. Walter H. Lenox-Maxwell.

It was never so much surprised in my life. I expected to meet something yellow-backed and blood-curdling, with gore-stains on its shirt-cuffs and clotted life currents tangled in its hair, but there was none of this in the dandy little trunker's aspect as he tripped suavely from his cell across the tessellated corridor and greeted us with smile that uncovered a set of teeth.

"Hurray! the guard made some mistake," said I to myself, "and opened the wrong cage!"

But he hadn't.

This was Maxwell we saw before us, his hand toward our hand, etc., and he made his identity unmistakable by asking us if we had any smoking-tobacco or cigarettes about us.

Maxwell does not look like a murderer. He is out of his sphere in jail. He should be selling popcorn at the Exposition, or waiting on both dead and forgotten.

MAGOOGIN.

it in their post mortem, as now, he will have a chance of going to his grave with his bones intact and no slashes of the dissecting knife in the nape of his neck.

I am sorry for Maxwell and I told him so, but he said he didn't think it would do him much good.

He felt very much hurt when I assured him that the newspapers had printed the truth about President and Mrs. Cleveland being in the same bed, and he was soon nursing the notion that it was simply a journalistic "fake," and that they hadn't been here at all. The injury which he sustained, when said he felt hurt, arose from the now newly-acquired knowledge of the fact that the Clevelands had been in town and had not been around to see him.

Maxwell stubbornly refused to use my hypodermic hose on several members of the Iroquois Club, whom I freely offered for the sacrifices, but he consented to show us how he had truncked the unfortunate Preller, at the same time manifesting no objection to the use of my trunk for the trial.

The procedure was very simple. He laid me on the Captain's desk, and placing the trunk beside it gently rolled it off. Then he put his heel in the pit of my stomach and softly squeezed me in.

After that he sprang cat-like on the roof of the trunk and bore down on it as if it were the platform of a weighing machine.

From a human standpoint the test could scarcely be called a success; at any rate it did not succeed as the Preller test, for if Maxwell had left Preller's head and hands sticking out of the trunk, as he left mine, Preller might have had some show for his wife alone.

He could have yelled "Fire" or frightened a chambermaid or done some other silly thing to call attention to his pernicious position.

Maxwell enjoyed standing on my neck much more than I enjoyed it.

"Yes," I remarked humorously, "we want to see Maxwell and die."

"You'll wish you had died first," the turnkey replied, as he jerked the jail door open, and without waiting to dispute this assertion we started out of our trunk, and without paying duty on it, or subjecting it to a court inspection, a la Mrs. Frank Leslie's in gag, and soon stood face to face with the popular and talented young murderer, Mr. Walter H. Lenox-Maxwell.

It was never so much surprised in my life. I expected to meet something yellow-backed and blood-curdling, with gore-stains on its shirt-cuffs and clotted life currents tangled in its hair, but there was none of this in the dandy little trunker's aspect as he tripped suavely from his cell across the tessellated corridor and greeted us with smile that uncovered a set of teeth.

The Iroquois Club were delighted with Maxwell and his skillful execution which would take the sarcasm out of my neck and restore me to my wonted vivacity.

I asked him if the punishment was one of his first attempts, but he layled all suspicion on me by explaining that I could have filled it at any giss from refreshment counter in the city; so said good-bye gaily and promised to be on hand when the Sheriff was distributing tickets for the soiree at the end of the Max-well season.

THE LAST GAME.

A METRICAL FORECAST OF THE DETROIT BROWNS SERIES.

The Thrillsome Moment of the Final Contest—Suspense Knee-Deep All Over the Grounds—Everybody in a Deep Perception—O'Neill sends the Ball Over the Fence and Hearts ResUME Their Wonted Beating.

What ho! my muse, bring forth
My very i'nd bat
And let me smash the ball
Down to the bulletin board!
All this fine figurative sense
Because I start to sing
The thrillin' thrill
Of that final game,
Wherin' the marvelous Browns
Shall come in and gleaning award
What's that? left
On the dim and distant team
That feebly represent Detroit.
And s-o-y, my muse, just let me swing
The lith & lignous willow for
A round of bases that will cause the wolk
To ring with shrieks of joy
As o'er the home-named plate
The whole durn'd nine
Comes madly trooping
With a host of runs.
And, look a here, my gallin' girl,
Don't you forget that you belong
To a pretty strum & yourself.
So off to the few & far-fetched frank appeal
I'll let the game go on
And turn my time and thoughts
To rasslin' with the un-hymn rhythm.

A fairer day ne'er shown on grander crowd
And each had paid his dollar round,
Or perhaps he paid $1.50,
To pass the gatherer at the gate
And every man his money's worth obtain'd
More or less.

For 18 innings, neck and neck,
The opposing platoons ran;
No run was scored, for 'tis where
Our gallin' girl's folder stood
With hands like capacious clothes baskets,
In attitude expectant, under it,
And in the meaty swing of base ball cranks,
It fell into the sew'r.

Excitement stoo'd on the grand stand,
And pale Anxiety quailed and shook
Among the fifty centers who
Adorn'd the bleaching boards.

The umpire's voice was tremulous and thick,
And drops of perspiration

Three inches in diameter shone
Upon the delicate brows
Of the players' players
And this does not include

The cold and clammy dew that fell

Altho' the trembling liver pads

Of Stearns and Von der Ahe.

Intense & terrible the deep suspense.

The braggart's shout was hush'd

And tpo wild whoopee

Of the untam'd Bedouin of the diamond

No longer rent the air—

There was no more of it to rent

Owing to the fierce demand

"Elkin property."

be game was young,

the heart of a dead mate

that gorgous crowd,

their lungs

lding on their hearts

One a man went to the bat.

a situation was

When in the seventhene,

Amid breathless hush,

The breathlessness of which

The crowd appreclated,

As it exalts a hushless breath by far—

Detroit's famed slugger, Richardson,

Faced the cute man of curves

And waited for the ball.

It came—

For various times the ball and bat

Pushed and never spoke.

And Richtie slunk to the player's bench

And sat down, feeling sick.

"Say, what's the matter with old Heart Disease?"

A voice out cried, and this reply came back

In measured couplets: "Oh, he's all right!"

Then Ganzel took his trusty bat

And sought the plate

With fierce instructions from his friends

To kill the ball.

But did he?

No, not much!

Not e'en a painful wound

Upon the boundry plate

Did he inflict.

He'd been maimed it, but Bushong

Chee clashed it in his fist

Ere yet great Ganzel's stick

Had crossed its course. And Ganzel, too,

Sat down upon the bench

And borrowed chewing tobacco.

But mark! What's this? The trumpets sound?

Rat-tat-tat! Rat-tat-tat-tat-tat-a-tum!

The King approaches!

Dundop, the dandy, hurls down the gage

And swings his wing wond

With dire intent to pase,

The ball upon its nose,

And gladdens ye so up

What's this? Another's hope

That at this, their chionship, still may save

The game and day?

Ganters wets his finger tips

And, with a cork screw twist

Of his nimble wrist,

Projects the unslung ball

Into the catcher's paws;

And this he does, with tireless skill,

As often as the law allows.

The hit attempt, more phantom than the re-ret.

Provide the King

With a fragrant coupon

On a seat on the players' bench,

Only he hadn't time to use it,

As his side was out,

And his services were required on second.

The Browns came rushing in

To have a hack at the ball,

And as the multitude's applause

Grew loud and voluminous

Monkey Latham clicked his heels

And somebody yelled out "Who-o-a!"

As he lit his laughing bat,

And one more jested.

Bronxman cracked the ball

And last it down to first,

While Gleason, who came next,

Stuck out his hip and struck the ball,

And thus acquired a base hit.

Latham was now on third

When Tip Nell advanced

And leaning o'er the plate

Reach'd for the curving sphere.

"Strike one!" the umpire cried

And Gleason went to second.

Once more the ball unto the catcher passed,

"Ball one!" the umpire shriek'd—

And so it went on two!

"Strike two!" said the umpire. "Strike three!"

"Ball four!" until suspense

No one seemed so thicke it might be showed

In tubs and time right off the grounds.

A lastin' ear could catch the sound

Of Von der Ahe's heart's wild beating,

And Manager Stearns

Look'd like the lasthoms of a condamn'd man.

A solemn silence sat upon the throng.

Bated breaths—

Bated with beer, perhaps—
And another, haggard face
Bored'd the altitude.
Only a single chance remained
For Getzein squeezed the ball
And lifting high leg in air
Sock'd a swift inshot

At the unoffending batter.
It might have been murder in the first degree,
But Tip O'Neil

Met the ball half way

And sent it careening o'er the fence

Int' a passing baggage wagon.

The ball had gone up its lungs

And stuck the star sphere

With one mad howl of joy

As Latham trotted home

And scored the winning run.

"Who-hoo-hoo-hoo-peeeess!"

"Rah for the Browns!"

And other wild and discordant remarks

Jarred on the Detroit's ears,

And they silently shoulder'd their bats

And sadly stade away.

This settling the business.

As anybody who knows anything about the game can readily understand.

Chris Von der Ahe was happy

And the Browns

The bating, fielding, base-running,

Coaching, clowning Browns—

Were champions of the world.

Chestnuts!

PICKING THE TEETH.

THE DASH AND VARIETY THAT SOME PEOPLE PUT INTO THE ART.

Anything from Brass Pin to a Railroad Spike Likely to be Used.—The Blood-Curdling Jack-Knife at the Boarding-House Table—Broomsticks and Lead Pencils Among the Dental Implements.

CONGRESS might enact a law prohibiting the picking of one's teeth in public, but it would do nothing about the investigation of the interests of a set of ivories with a silver or ash or a properly pointed quill, but the parading of toothpicks and of the art of toothpicking has become so common that even womankind has fallen into the habit, and it is nothing unusual to see jauntily dressed and innocent-featured dames and damsels doing the grand on the down-town thoroughfares during the dinner hour. Not short girls only, but females who have pretensions to family and who are not slow to announce that the bluest kind of blood once coursed in the veins of their ancestors are guilty of this vulgar folly, and while it may add piquancy and a dash of nonchalance to the general aspect of a good-looking girl, it detracts from her tone, and is rather a serious reflection upon her breeding. The practice is not so general in St. Louis as it is in other cities where the restaurants are more numerously patronized by females than they are here. Take a town where the men are more inclined to frequent the boardings and the boudoirs, and there you will find women using toothpicks on the street as freely as they use parasols or portmanteaus.

The Finger Friend. Next to the finger friend comes the demon who picks his teeth with a fork. He flourishes at the boarding-house table where toothpicks are used as luxury as a menu of unashed onions. The fork may be the sharp-pointed blunt end of the fork may be the rash and impetuous wanderer accommodates it to the taste between his fingers, and the prongs that descend through them. He seizes the fork with the grip which a blacksmith gives to a hammer when he is in the heat of the agitated condition of a man who has gone to knock it galley-west or die in the attempt. The fork is then fisted and frowned down by the best society, but it gets through on a special ticket at the boardings and the boudoirs, and, though not so popular, but a day or two at the table accustoms the arrival to the idiosyncrasies of the other members, and soon the knife-swallowing and fork-waving become a general slight sensation.

Sometimes a man wanders in the boardings and takes a chair at the boardings-table; he is a very pleasant gentleman with a red face and a round full voice, and he gets along with the girls until the time comes to serve around the slate of dyspepsia which are called by courtesy, pie. Then comes Wood, who he may be called for the purpose, who sits down and reaches in his chair and reaches into the folds of his pants for something that he seems to have lost in the pocket, and then reaches behind and behold it is a jack-knife, big enough to kill hogs with. He opens the large blade and presents it to every person present by plucking the steel from his hands. They expect to see him fall back dead, bleeding from every pore, but they are disappointed. Mr. Wood, who is called to sit bolt upright and never for a moment remain still, is the finger friend.

But there isn't any variety to the feminine way of finding a square mean in the hollow of a tooth. There cannot be that picturequeness to her effort with which a long-necked young man in light overcoat and high collar invests his achievement when he gracefully poses in the foreground of a picture with a first-class hotel as one of the accessories, and a debonair atmosphere softly enveloping his dudessque tout ensemble. The best that a woman can do, if she wants to throw any art into her teeth-pulling days, is to pick up the features and with a section of stout fence railings and a sword from her lips, stalk majestically down the street like a person who doesn't give a continental hooran for who sees her or who says that she is not doing right. A man though can surround toothpicking with a vividness of interest akin to the thrill that an actress puts into four yards of emotion. He can pick his teeth as he pleases and knock the rules of etiquette higher than a yellow kite. Take any ordinary individual with a set of tools at hand and give him a seat at a dinner-table, and if he has the proper spirit and versatility for the business he can make a better hit than a red-headed boy in a three-ring circus and create more consternation in the circle of which he has just a frisky little mouse in a bus-load of hysterical women.

The Fork-Worker. There are no training schools in which a specialty is made of teaching the young idea how to pick their teeth; neither are there any public contests to determine the champion of the toothpicking world, nor prizes offered for competition in this branch of odontology. Seemingly no encouragement is offered to popularize refinement in the art, and so the men and women who practice it do it with a sense of guilt that suits themselves best, and are led to stoop down and stir their teeth and tongue and gum in their mouths, and distinction held out to impress them. With all the other efforts and endeavors in whatever else the public cares to designate at a star-and-still it will look as a real masterpiece of art if devoted even a small portion of the SUNDAY Post-Dispatch to a disquisition on the art, but there are few people in existence who do not know just how much art has advanced and just how many-pleasant and well-illustrated it really is. For the edification of the public, the blood-curdling word-slinging talent of the Post-Dispatch have combined in this toothsome and intrepid article.

IRELAND'S NATIONAL COLOR. Michael Davitt Says That It Is the Orange of Elster and Not the Emerald Green. From the New York EVENING WORLD. Michael Davitt, the Irish agitator, who knows Irish history from before the time of Brian Boru, destroyed a fond and familiar belief the other day. It is generally thought that the national color of Ireland from time immemorial was green. Since the time of Tom Moore poets have sung of the banner of green and the emerald gem of the sea. The patriots of '98 and '48 carried and fought under flags of that verdant hue and there are few loyal Irishmen who to-day would believe that the national color of Ireland was any other than green; much less would they be willing to admit that it is the hated orange, but such is the case.

In his speech on the discussion of the position of Ulster in the fight for home rule, Davitt remarks upon the subject of Ireland desiring every bit of the island and having the right to do so. "I am for the scheme of nationalization," Mr. Davitt said. "Ulster displays the national color of the empire, the orange, and I am for the recognition of that color. I presume that that is owing as much to Tom Moore's disregard of or lack of knowledge of the national color as anything else. Orange was the national color of Ireland for a long time, and it was first used in 1798."

This experiment also disposed of another popular belief shared by even Orangemen themselves, and that is that the bit of orange ribbon they occasionally display is worn in memory of the battle of the Boyne. In fact, it is only the Irish national color, the orange, that existed hundreds of years before William of Orange, which they are flaunting. C. E. BLEE MILLINERY CO., 419 N. Some gentlemen will come along one of the days with a pocketbook full of dollars which he shall achieve in time—as per the Mikado rhyme—to make the punishment fit the crime. I hope that the man with the toothpick thumb cannot have the punishment made any too hard for him to suffer the rest of the public.

the on-looker that come near bringing on case of tetanus and back of his front teeth and wrists with one of the hinges of his jaw, as he tries to pry a grape seed out of the nine-nineteen-toothed mouth. He is the force of violence to the feelings of every person within seeing distance of him, and if the attention of the Human Society could be directed to him at the present moment, it would not be impossible that the Judge of the Police Court would be dealing with him next morning on account of his bad conduct. The police were made before toothpicks, of course, but that is no excuse for avowing the gentle and quiet life of a toothpick. It is a crime to go unworthy of justice.
